early hour finishing the interior. All instruments for testing the cable were placed in readiness. Electrician Pratt, from Slemens Brothers, and Electrician Charles Cuttey, of the Cable company, arrived early to superintend the arrangements of recovering the shore end in behalf of the company.

It was made known shortly after the preparations had been made that all hopes of landing the commercial cable to-usy were given up and all parties interested left for home. The delay, as far as is known, was caused by a howser becoming entangled with the propellor tag while paying out and intended for hauling to the shore the raft, bearing the cable. At 60 clock the tag was still always all the cable.
